The actual corporation will involve employment of between 900 and 1,200 people, Strachan said, some of whom have already been hired. A headquarters for the corporation will be built, at a site which has not yet been determined.

Branch offices will be set up throughout the province, from which citizens will be able to purchase both insurance and motor vehicle registration stickers.

A sum of $5 million has been allowed for in the legislation which will be used as "seed money" to get the corporation started. This money will be in the form of a repayable loan from the government, Strachan said, and will carry interest charges.

Strachan described as a "mammoth task" the jo bof transforming the legislation into "a corporate reality ready to handle this huge volume of business." More than 1.3 million drivers are involved, he said, and one million vehicles. The job has been described by systems analysts as "a project equiva-lent to more than half the planning and development work that went into creating Expo '67 in Montreal as a national effort."

While the car insurance aspects of the corporation will become effective March 1, 1974, other forms of insurance coverage will be made available more quickly. Strachan said fire and casualty insurance will probably begin operations before the end of 1973.

ICBC is expected to do about $175 million worth of business In its first year of operation, Strachan said, mostly involving car insurance. The largest single dealer in general insurance, including car insurance, Royal Insurance Group, did only about $150 million worth of business last year, he said.

An important feature of the machinery setting up the corporation is that the money paid in premiums for the car insurance plan will be for the exclusive use of the plan and for no other purposes. Any profits from operations will be recycled back into the plan, having the effect of lowering premiums. This includes money earned from interest charges of premiums invested by the corporation.

Strachan was quick to point out that he is convinced there will be no lack of a market for motorists in the interim period between expiry of motorists' policies and the starting date of the government plan.

A. E Warrick, head of the B.C. advisory council of the Insurance Bureau of Canada, told Strachan in the letter that the insurance companies will continue operating until the starting date.

A meeting betweeen the two men has been arranged for Thursday to discuss details on the timing and content of the government program.

As for the commissions now being earned by insurance agents, Strachan said there will likely be a downward revision of the current rate of 121/2 per cent.

Commissions for agents were instituted on the principle that the agents "had to go out and hustle for them," Strachan said. Since the former Social Credit government made car insurance compulsory several years ago, there has not been the need for the agents to drum up their own business, it has come right to them. And yet the commission rate had remained at the same level, he said.

Employees of ICBC who sell insurance policies will not be paid commissions, Strachan said. They will be on salary.

Another important feature of the legislation is discretionary power granted to cabinet to require organizations which receive government grants or loans - such as school boards, hospital boards, municipalities and universities -- to buy their required general insurance from ICBC. The cabinet, by order-in-council, will establish in which areas the corporation will offer insurance coverage and will pass regulations dealing with specific policy.

The corporation will be empowered to go into the repair and car salvaging business, undertake medical rehabilitation programs, acquire property and take over or jointly operate "any other company in the entire insurance field."

The corporation will pay provincial taxes, will pour its surplus funds into the provincial treasury and will invest its reserve funds into traditional securities or government projects such as school or hospital buildings.

The options open to the individual driver will be as follows: He may go to his present private agent provided that agent is an ICBC licence-holder - and buy both his compulsory insurance and licence sticker. He may buy the sticker and insurance from the Motor Vehicle Branch or provincial government agent. Or he may buy sticker and insurance from ICBC directly, either by mail or by visiting a branch office of the corporation. Actual licence plates, however, must be purchased from the Motor Vehcile Branch, not through ICBC.

'This substantially increased number of outlets should reduce licence line-ups in the annual last minute rush across the province," Strachan said.

All victims of uninsured or hit-and-run drivers will be covered by ICBC, he said. Ordinary accident victims will be able to sue for damages over and above the level of no-fault benefits.

Asked if the two bills introduced will go to a legislatuve committee for study. Strachan said he does not feel that is necessary. A royal commission has already exhaustively studied the field, he said, and recommended that the government get into the insurance business if private industry did not change its operations.

When MLAs are required to vote on the legislation, they will be voting on endorsation of a plan which "clearly outlines a principle, a mode of operations and a field of operations," Strachan said. But he added that "ballpark figures" on rates will likely be available to the legislature before the bills are taken through the committee stage.

The legislation will definitely be passed at thi session he said.

Asked about NDP campaign literature which said that the former government had been able to insure its vehicles for less than $25 per year, Strachan said the Socred claim was not entirely truthful. Civil servants who were involved in accidents while driving government cars were assessed as much as $500.

he said, expenditures which were never shown on the books. Financial statistics of ICBC will be filed annually in the legislature. Information of a personal nature in connection with investigation of claims will be kept confidential, to be used only court cases or when the individual gives his permission.

Strachan said there have been precedents in the government's action of taking over insurance operations in B.C. The workmen's compensation plans and unemployment insurance schemes were formerly in the private sector, he said, and were taken over by government.

"When a government, for the public good, compels citizens to buy a certain type of insurance, it has an obligation to eliminate profit-making from what is virtually a tax and a further obligation to make it as economical as possible for the captive market," he said.

The auto repair shop to be established by the government will be for the purpose of allowing ICBC to get accurate information on cost factors. The corporation would be required to bargain with private auto repair companies over the rates the companies will charge for doing work on ICBC insured vehicles.

possibility that in the near future we will be retiring a very significant proportion of our most expensive and least productive forest lands from timber production and concentrating timber production on those sections of our forest land which provide the best combination of productive capacity and accessibility.

"The future of timber production in British Columbia, as elsewhere, is dependent on the requirements and limitations of the machine to which we must increasingly turn to maintain our productivity and economic viability," he said. "Total mechanization of timber production is inevitable and with it will come the high equipment capitalization which always produces specialization," Walters said. As a result, the machine government. The "100 per cent takeover" of the car insurance business could be an indication that the government intends to eventually take over all aspects of the in-

Something could have been done about pollution or the heroin problem, he said, or chronic care hospitals. And for the government to think that it will not have to spend public money in the operation of the car insurance scheme is "wishful thinking at its worst," he said.

Wallace said the surprising thing about the measure is the fact the government has moved so early in its administration to give itself the power to take over all aspects of the insurance business.

The provision which allows the government to require school boards and hospital boards to buy government insurance only is a lessening of local autonomy, Wallace said. He added that the whole scheme is based on "the false premise that if the government does it, it will be cheaper and the service will he hetter." This was not the case with the government-run plan in Manitoba, he said.
